Our Mission:

“TO RELIEVE THE MISFORTUNES AND PROMOTE THE WELL-BEING OF HUMANKIND”
Persistence is a quality that has become increasingly important in accomplishing change in the current environment. Funders and nonprofits are engaged in creating change, whether it’s within lives, education systems, neighborhoods and communities, or society itself. Those changes do not come easily and so persistence is an important attribute. Persistence has been especially important in the last several years, in the face of a weak economy, long-term unemployment, tight bank credit and a continuing housing slump.

Persistence is what allows Neighborhood Service Organization to convert the former “Bell Building” into one of the largest permanent supportive housing facilities in Detroit. It will provide 155 new units to formerly homeless individuals with accompanying medical and social services to help address the issues that had previously kept them on the streets. It will also allow NSO to save money by consolidating administrative functions that have been scattered throughout Detroit.

Similar persistence helped the College for Creative Studies (CCS) to develop the A. Alfred Taubman Center for Design Education. This new use for the formerly vacant General Motors design center houses design studios and classrooms for CCS undergraduate and graduate courses, student living space, a charter school for students in grades 6 to 12 interested in art and design, and commercial space that has been leased to new creative businesses. This project is helping to transform Midtown Detroit.

David DiChiera, the Founder, General Director and President of Michigan Opera Theatre, was the personification of persistence as he led fundraising to reduce and restructure $18 million in debt. This organization-wide effort ultimately succeeded because Dr. DiChiera, a beloved arts leader in our community, was able to persuade long-time donors and new friends to step up in extraordinary ways. The result will allow MOT to be more financially sustainable as it pursues its artistic future. The Detroit Symphony Orchestra also completed a debt restructuring after negotiations with several lending institutions that continued over multiple years. Like MOT, this new financial position makes their future much clearer.

In 2010, several health care organizations that serve low income people in Detroit and Wayne County decided to develop additional sites as Federally-Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs). They accepted an offer of support from several foundations through the Detroit/Wayne County Health Authority to hire grant writers to help them put together the most competitive applications possible. When none of the applications were approved by the Federal Department of Health and Human Services in the first round, the groups persisted with their cases and in the second round, three were approved. This FQHC designation will allow Covenant Community Care, the Wellness Plan Medical Centers and Wayne County to receive direct financial support from Washington for the care they provide to Medicaid and uninsured patients.

People in Detroit and Southeast Michigan do not give up easily, and fortunately the same is true of the region’s nonprofit organizations. These are just a few examples of persistence paying off for nonprofit organizations in the face of deeply challenging times and leading to improvements in the quality of life within our region. Each of these projects received McGregor Fund.
support, along with support from other funders. We are proud of the good work accomplished by the nonprofit organizations in Detroit and Southeast Michigan. In total, the McGregor Fund board of trustees approved 64 grants totaling $6,046,110 in the 2012 fiscal year.

In the past year, the Fund selected four more agency directors to receive Eugene A. Miller Fellowships. Eligibility was expanded beyond human services to include health care organizations. The new Miller Fellows are: John Barnett, Project NOAH/Central United Methodist Church; Sheilah Clay, Neighborhood Service Organization (NSO); Amanda Good, Alternatives For Girls; and Sister Mary Ellen Howard, Cabrini Clinic/Trinity Community Services and Educational Foundation.

The program was named for Eugene Miller, former McGregor Fund trustee and board chair, and former chairman and CEO of Comerica, Inc. It provides funding to allow long-serving agency CEOs to take an extended time away from their day-to-day responsibilities to pursue activities that will be personally reinvigorating and provide new knowledge and experiences that will benefit the agencies they lead. These bring to nine the number of Miller Fellowships that have been awarded and we have been gratified to see their positive impact.

In December 2011, Ira J. Jaffe retired from the McGregor Fund board of trustees. Ira is the founding partner of the Jaffe, Raitt, Heuer & Weiss, PC law firm and a very active attorney. During Ira’s board service, he spent time chairing the Audit Committee and the Governance Committee, while serving on the Investment Committee since joining the board in 2003. We feel very fortunate to have had so much of his time and extraordinary knowledge during his years on the board. We have included the resolution passed by his fellow board members upon his retirement.

In March 2012, the board elected Reuben A. Munday to fill the vacancy created by Ira’s retirement. Reuben is Chairman of the Lewis & Munday law firm and very active in the civic life of Detroit. We look forward to his service on the board.

In the opening of this letter, we made reference to the challenging current economic environment. As evidence of those challenges, we have struggled to grow the financial assets of the McGregor Fund. During the course of the fiscal year ended June 30, 2012, the Fund’s assets declined from $164,471,807 to $154,181,537. The Investment Committee is working closely with our Investment Consultants to make several changes in asset allocation and specific investments to better maintain and improve the Fund’s ability to provide grants to benefit the people of metropolitan Detroit.

Like the nonprofit organizations supported by the McGregor Fund, we will persist in the work begun by Tracy and Katherine McGregor to relieve misfortune and improve the well-being of people living in this region. We want to close with appreciation for the time, wisdom and dedication of the Fund’s volunteer board of trustees and the hard work and commitment of our staff. We are honored to work with all of them toward the betterment of the community.

Tracy McGregor was born in Berlin Heights, Ohio in 1869. While in high school he assisted his parents, Thomas and Elizabeth in founding the Helping Hand Mission for the homeless and needy in Toledo, Ohio. In April 1891, Thomas McGregor opened a similar mission located on Cadillac Square in downtown Detroit. Following his untimely death just three weeks later, his son Tracy left college to take over its operation.

For 45 years Tracy remained closely involved with the Mission for Homeless Men, later renamed the McGregor Institute. As Detroit became one of the nation’s leading industrial centers and the automobile capital of the world, the Institute provided food and lodging for more than 700,000 men, and assisted many thousands in finding work. The Institute closed in 1935 as the federal and state governments expanded programs for the indigent during the Great Depression.

Katherine Whitney was born in 1873 into a prominent Detroit family. Her father, David Whitney, Jr., made a considerable fortune from lumbering, shipping and real estate ventures. Not content to pursue the social pleasures of her peers, Katherine was directly involved in helping the less fortunate. While in her teens... she volunteered at the Infant Ward of the Children’s Free Hospital at the Florence Crittenden Mission. Later she established an orphanage in Highland Park, Michigan, and the Bay Court facility to aid young mothers near Mt. Clemens. She also gave generously to numerous local charities including the Visiting Nurses Association, the Detroit Community Union and the McGregor Institute.

Katherine Whitney met Tracy McGregor while volunteering at the Children’s Free Hospital. Their friendship grew when she sang and played piano at evening chapel services at the McGregor Mission. They married in November 1901 and formed a life-long partnership to aid Detroit charities and families in need of assistance.

The marriage to Katherine gave Tracy the opportunity to advance other innovative humanitarian projects. With other wealthy Detroiter, he formed the Provident Loan Society to make low-cost loans available to thousands of Detroit area families. In 1913, Tracy organized the Thursday Noon Group of about 25 community, business and civic leaders. They met weekly to discuss and find solutions to community problems. They were successful in leading campaigns to reform the court and educational systems of Detroit, establish a hospital and farm for the treatment of epileptics, and create training centers for young men and women in trouble with the law.

Education was always one of the McGregors’ priorities. Tracy and Katherine gave financial support to schools and colleges and individual grants to hundreds of young men and women for college expenses. Tracy also helped found the Merrill Palmer Institute to provide Detroit’s children with formalized programs in child development, and served as its president for 16 years.

In his later years, Tracy started to collect books and maps relating to the periods of discovery, exploration and colonization in American history. In a brief ten-year period, he developed one of the finest extant collections of Americana. After his death, the collection was given to the University of Virginia where it serves as the core of the rare book collection of the Alderman Library.

In 1925, Tracy and Katherine decided to make sure their extensive financial resources would continue to be used for social, educational and charitable programs. In that year, they established the McGregor Fund and continued to add to the Fund’s resources until it was large enough to commence an active grant program. During 1931-1936, Tracy identified the Fund’s primary grantmaking priorities as higher education, youth services, health care and scientific research. Special grants were given for programs aiding transients, the homeless, and the chronically ill, and education programs benefiting African Americans.

After Tracy’s death in 1936, Katherine continued to give major gifts to the Fund and local charities until her death in 1954. Since then, the Fund has continued to carry out the legacy of Tracy and Katherine McGregor.
The Eugene A. Miller Fellowship Program, launched in 2009, is named for Eugene Miller, who served on the McGregor Fund board of trustees for 24 years and as chairman from 2001-2008. In recognition for his years of distinguished corporate and civic leadership, this program is designed to recognize excellent, longstanding leaders of nonprofit organizations in metropolitan Detroit.

This program arose from the observation that many of the Detroit area’s strongest agencies are led by long-serving executives, who often work very long hours for relatively low compensation and constantly face challenges to keep their agencies financially afloat. Frequently, these agencies have minimal resources available for professional development or for staff coverage during an executive’s extended absence.

The program typically selects, on a competitive basis, three agency directors per year to take time away from their day-to-day responsibilities and pursue a self-designed set of activities to rejuvenate themselves and do something of benefit for their organization or field.

The following individuals were this year’s recipients of the Eugene A. Miller Fellowship Program.

Amanda L. Good, CEO, Alternatives for Girls

Mary Ellen Howard, RSM, Executive Director, St. Frances Cabrini Clinic

John C. Barnett, Project N.O.A.H. Coordinator, Central United Methodist Church

Sheilah P. Clay, President & CEO, Neighborhood Service Organization

Amanda L. Good “My sabbatical experience has given me an unprecedented opportunity to learn (e.g., performance measurement, mindfulness, best practices), to learn, to complete a triathlon, and to take on exciting challenges in professional growth together, in new ways, with my AFG coworkers!”

Mary Ellen Howard “I value the time the fellowship has allowed me for reflection — about my life and the life of Cabrini Clinic.”
Sheilah P. Clay: “This experience is renewing my spirit and my purpose through the lives of the people who have touched my heart.”

John C. Barnett: “Words cannot adequately convey the vastness of the rewards I have received from this unique and privileged experience. I feel renewed, younger, stronger. This sabbatical has been an adventure of rejuvenation in the physical, intellectual, emotional, and spiritual realms.”

Forgotten Harvest, founded in 1990, is the only mobile food rescue agency serving metropolitan Detroit. It rescues prepared and perishable food from more than 450 businesses, including grocery stores, wholesale distributors, farms, restaurants, commercial bakeries, cafeterias, caterers, casinos and banquet facilities, and transports the food to over 250 soup kitchens, food pantries, homeless shelters, street feeding programs and other programs serving very low-income clients. The agency has been widely recognized for being well-managed and running highly efficient operations: its cost to recover and redistribute food is the lowest of food rescuers nationwide, and no fees are charged to recipients.

In 2010, Forgotten Harvest launched a four-year, $11 million campaign to increase its annual rescue and distribution of free food from 18 to 36 million pounds. By the close of the 2012 fiscal year, the agency had already surpassed this goal, rescuing a remarkable 42 million pounds of food in just 12 months and making Forgotten Harvest the largest food rescuer in the country. Combined gifts from the Fund toward the campaign total $1 million.

Forgotten Harvest has been a national leader and innovator among food rescue agencies, pioneering the first donation programs with Fortune 500 grocery chains and industrial food processors, and developing customized logistics technology, all since adopted by similar agencies around the US. In 2010, Forgotten Harvest was awarded a Eugene A. Miller Fellowship Program grant for a sabbatical for CEO Susan Goddell, in recognition of her extraordinary leadership of the agency and nationally, within the field.

Neighborhood Service Organization (NSO)
The McGregor Fund provided a $1 million leadership grant to NSO for its Bell Building project, which is retrofitting the former Michigan Bell Building on Oakman Boulevard in Detroit to provide 155 one-bedroom apartments of permanent supportive housing for people who were long-term, chronically homeless. The project encompasses best design elements and practices from similar projects across the nation, and will set a new standard locally for helping chronically homeless Detroiters return to healthy and productive lives. Onsite professional services will include case management, and mental health and addiction treatment; peer support groups will also be organized. Facilities for residents include a half-court gym (shared with NSO employees), a small library, computer room, art workshop, a small fitness center, music room, chapel, laundry, a small sundry shop and meeting rooms. Tenants will also have a walk-out roof garden and outdoor space on the building grounds. A second phase of the project will allow NSO to move other programs and its administrative offices to the site. In total, the $50 million project encompasses 253,800 sq. ft., with the first tenant occupancy in fall of 2012.

The Bell Building marks NSO’s first major effort to operate permanent supportive housing with on-site services. Founded in 1955, NSO operates programs in such areas as adult and child mental health; addiction treatment; suicide prevention (including over 100,000 calls answered annually); older adult services; and youth-focused violence and substance abuse prevention. Combined, each year these services help tens of thousands of Detroiters as well as residents of western Wayne and Oakland counties. Its Tumaini Center, which opened in 1975, is a walk-in shelter of last resort for Detroit’s homeless, including individuals who are abusing substances or untreated mentally ill. The Center records an average of over 650 visits per day. In 2006, NSO launched Project Helping Hands with the City of Detroit. Through mobile outreach, teams of mental health and substance abuse specialists seek out Detroit’s most isolated, mentally ill and chronically homeless. With the Bell Building and its other programs, NSO is bringing more visibility to the severe problem of homelessness in Detroit.

In recognition of the outstanding leadership provided by the agency and CEO Sheilah Clay, NSO was awarded a Eugene A. Miller Fellowship Program grant in 2011 for a sabbatical for Mrs. Clay.

The Fund considers support for organizations that improve access to primary medical care, mental health care and substance abuse treatment for indigent, low-income, and other highly underserved populations, primarily within the city of Detroit.

The Greening of Detroit was awarded $250,000 over two years to expand its core urban agriculture programs for family, community and market gardens and small production-focused farms, with the goal of making Detroit more food secure. The Garden Resource Program is expected to reach nearly 15,000 residents and over 1,500 community, school, market and family gardens by the end of 2012, producing over 170 tons of fresh, nutritious produce for predominantly low-income families. Across Detroit, the Greening has organized eight cluster groups to foster relationships among gardeners and other community activists, and provide more convenient access to resources and learning opportunities. Hands-on cooking and food preservation workshops are held to help gardeners turn their produce into healthy meals for their families. Classes are also offered in composting, beekeeping and other topics useful to gardeners at all skill levels. The Greening collaborates closely with the Capuchin Soup Kitchen/EarthWorks Urban Farm, Detroit Agriculture Network and Michigan State University.

The Greening has also launched the Detroit Market Garden near Eastern Market, which will grow over 60 varieties of fruits and vegetables for sale through the use of season-extending structures, such as solar passive moveable greenhouses. Finally, the agency offers the Market Garden Training Program to seasoned gardeners interested in creating and sustaining profitable market gardens in the city. Some participants become involved in the Grown In Detroit Farmers’ Market Cooperative and sell produce in area farmers’ markets.

The Greening of Detroit was established in 1989 to reforest the city of Detroit. Since then, it has planted more than 50,000 trees, transforming city blocks, school yards, play fields, parks, apartment complexes and boulevards. Plantings involve over 4,000 volunteers annually, and its educational programs annually reach 14,000 inner-city young people with lessons and experiences in environmental stewardship. It operates the former City of Detroit nursery, which it has transformed into a workforce training and learning center. In a typical year, the Greening distributes nearly 50,000 packets of seeds and 230,000 Detroit-grown transplants. MF

To support general operations.
Matrix Theatre Company was awarded $150,000 over two years as fiduciary for Detroit Community Arts Alliance, an administrative and fundraising collaboration of four arts organizations based in southwest Detroit. The collaboration was inspired by the work of Detroit Chamber Winds and Strings, also supported by the Fund, which provides administrative, financial, fundraising and marketing services to a number of small performing arts organizations. The Detroit Community Arts Alliance creates shared capacity for “back office” functions, with the goals of raising more revenue; improving the quality of financial, marketing and administrative functions; and stabilizing or growing the partner organizations’ respective programmatic offerings. The two-year grant from the McGregor Fund is supporting the first element of the collaborative’s capacity building plan—fund development—through the hiring of both staff and consultants.

Matrix Theatre Company uses the transformative power of theatre to change lives, build community and foster social justice, by offering southwest Detroit residents of all ages opportunities to create, produce and attend original theatrical works. Founded in 1991, the Company creates new plays for audiences totaling over 10,000, with approximately 500 participants in a professional destination theatre, a theatre school for students ages 5-adult, and a community puppets workshop. Partner Heritage Works celebrates the beauty and humanity of African people through music, movement and folklore. Its three programs are Heritage After School, Community-Family Arts, and Heritage Youth Troupe, offering a variety of experiences in arts training and cultural discovery. Living Arts works with the student-aged population by integrating the arts into school curricula; offering safe, high-quality and affordable after-school programs; and producing public arts projects and celebrations to strengthen the community. VSA Michigan is dedicated to helping teachers, families and community organizations promote creativity in people with disabilities. Founded in 1977, VSA affiliates with a wide range of arts and education programs. Collectively, the four partner organizations share elements of their respective arts and education-focused missions, their organizational values, and their goals for integrating arts into the community and the lives of the under-served.
In the area of education, the Fund’s grant program is multi-faceted. The Fund provides support for specific projects at elementary and secondary schools serving metropolitan Detroit, and colleges and universities in the Detroit area. The Fund also supports a special program for private liberal arts colleges and universities in Michigan. In addition to the general and special programs, discretionary grants are awarded to educational institutions selected each year by Trustees of the Fund.

Programs for Schools and Early Child Education and Development

The McGregor Fund has a long history of supporting elementary and secondary education. Funding has been provided to both independent schools and public school districts to support efforts to assure that all students have access to high quality education. The program for support of pre-college education considers requests from public school systems, independent schools and alternative school models based on a set of priorities adopted by the Fund. Consistent with the Fund’s other grantmaking, requests are considered from schools within the metropolitan Detroit area.

Eastern Michigan University
The Fund provided $160,000 to support a second year of the University Preparatory Opening Doors program (UPOD), a partnership between Eastern Michigan University and the University Preparatory Academy (UPrep) schools in Detroit. The program targets the bottom 10% of the graduating class, who are not eligible for admission to a four-year college and who, in the past, have not fared well in community colleges. UPOD, which began in September, 2011, was developed collaboratively by educators at UPrep and EMU. In its first year, a cohort of graduating high school seniors from UPrep was conditionally admitted to EMU. Throughout the fall semester they were transported from Detroit to EMU, where they took four classes, were monitored closely and given structured support and guidance. The program stressed both hard and soft skills. The first cohort achieved a 3.05 GPA, and 94% became regular enrollment students at EMU for the winter semester.

For its second year, the program will accept 40 matriculating freshmen — 20 each from UPrep and University High School, a school of choice in Ferndale whose students are primarily from low-income Detroit families. The latter operates in partnership with Lawrence Technological University and many seniors take classes on the Lawrence campus. However, while University High School graduates 90% or more of its seniors each year, like UPrep it has found that students who enroll in community colleges have not been successful.

In the fall of 2012, the new UPOD students will be transported from their former high schools to EMU five days per week, for a full day of academic and soft-skills classes including a total of 12 credit hours. Supplemental undergraduate instructor/tutors will provide group tutoring, an academic coach will be assigned to mentor each student individually, and all students must sign contracts agreeing to abide by the requirements of the program. Students will also be guided on developing their academic and career interests, and those who achieve at least a 2.0 average will be admitted to EMU and move into a residence hall for the winter semester. Once two years of the program have been completed, the participating partners hope to have learned much more about helping lower-performing students make a successful transition to college.
